The RBR started the final weekend of the Japanese GP on the right foot. In the first free practice, the Austrian team conquered the front row with Max Verstappen and Sergio Pérez in the first two positions. The three-time Formula 1 champion had abandoned the Australian GP due to brake problems and admits to seeing closer competitors in the current season.

- I think it was a good start for us. The balance wasn't too far away, so I think it's always a great way to start. But it seems that everyone is a bit closer compared to last year - said the RBR driver and three-time Formula 1 champion.

RBR had no difficulty surpassing their rivals in the first free practice for the Japanese GP. Even with hard tires, Verstappen and Pérez posted positive times to top the TL1. The Dutchman posted a 1m30s056 time with soft tires and took the best time of the practice, followed by his teammate and Carlos Sainz, from Ferrari, in third place. The Spaniard won the Australian GP abandoned by the three-time champion.

Later, in TL2, rain was the protagonist of the session, which had neither of the two RBR drivers on the track. Oscar Piastri, from McLaren, posted the best time of the practice and was followed by Lewis Hamilton, from Mercedes, and Charles Leclerc, from Ferrari. For Verstappen, the competitors are closer this season compared to last year.

- So, of course, we could not do anything in TL2. There are still some things to look at, to try, but overall I am very happy with the TL1. Of course, the long straights speed, again, I have no idea how it will be, but I do not expect the differences to be as they were at this track last year.

Sergio Pérez followed Verstappen's speech and stated that RBR is very close to the other teams on the grid. For the Japanese GP, the Austrian team arrived with a new floor, changes in the sidepod entries, and new cooling channels.

- It was a good session overall. I think we did our best on the TL1. I think we're in a very similar boat to many people around us, so I think we'll wait until tomorrow for a better reading - said the Mexican driver.

The third free practice of the Japanese GP will be this Friday, at 11 pm (Brasília time). Follow the main news on ge.
