The White Lotus filma en la isla tailandesa de Samui: ¿un impulso para el turismo o una nueva amenaza para el medio ambiente?

Along the coast of the Thai island of Samui, vendors are preparing tables covered with souvenirs and sunglasses. The staff at the massage centers and restaurants makes signs to the passers-by, waiting to attract tourists.

Soon there could be even more potential customers passing through the area. The island is one of the locations that will appear in the third season of The White Lotus, a series so popular that its previous scenarios, Hawaii and Sicily, experienced an increase in demand for travelers.

In Samui, it has been taking place this year in the Four Seasons, a luxurious hotel of five stars surrounded by tropical forest and with views of the Gulf of Thailand.

El efecto de The White Lotus en sus ubicaciones

The first season, which was filmed in the Four Seasons Resort Maui at Wailea in Hawaii, caused an increase of 425% in the web traffic interannual, according to reports. Sicily, which appeared in the second season, also experienced an increase in demand. The San Domenico Palace, an ancient monastery with views of the sea that appeared in the series, reported that it was completely reserved during months.

El costo ambiental del turismo en Samui

While so, the inhabitants of Samui have manifested their concern for the environmental cost of the increase in tourism. The rapid development has caused a intense pressure on the environment. The opening of luxury hotels and golf courses has exhausted the water of the island. The fast boats and the noisy parties on the beach have driven away the marine life. The development of new villas, in some cases in violation of the building rules, has contributed to the fears of landslides and floods. The enormous growth in the number of visitors to Samui, both of tourists and workers who have moved to the island to attend them, has generated enormous volumes of waste.

La montaña de basura de Samui

An impactful symbol of the environmental cost of tourism in Samui is a mountain of waste that weighs 150,000 tons. The accumulation began after the island's incinerator was destroyed, according to the residents. Every day 150 tons more are added to the pile.

En 2024, el número de llegadas de turistas al aeropuerto de Samui alcanzó los 2,2 millones. En comparación, las estimaciones de 1998 sugieren que la isla recibía más de 700.000 personas al año. Además, hay 70.000 personas locales y 200.000 personas que trabajan en Samui.

Samui necesita 30.000 metros cúbicos de agua al día para abastecer a todos sus residentes y negocios. La mayoría, 24.000 metros cúbicos, se transportan a la isla a través de un oleoducto submarino desde Surat Thani en la parte continental, pero las reservas de suministro no son suficientes para compensar la escasez.

Los hoteles grandes compran agua privadamente, pero esto es demasiado costoso para los residentes. Muchos han comprado tanques para almacenar agua cuando las reservas estén bajas o extraen agua subterránea. Los residentes han informado de que no pueden ducharse en casa durante días o tener que usar los baños de un templo cercano porque no tienen suministro de agua.

Anon Vatayanon, quien posee una tienda de impresión en Samui y es un activista ambiental, dijo que se necesita un énfasis mucho mayor en cómo mantener la isla de manera sostenible. "No solo atraer a más personas y agotar nuestros recursos naturales – no importa cuán conveniente pueda ser o lo que podamos lograr. Sin recursos naturales – el mar, la arena y el sol, el punto de venta único de Samui – nadie vendrá."
