Seis Peces Serrano Mueren En Florida, Lo Que Provoca Concernación

El pez serrano de dientes pequeños, una especie en peligro crítico, se enfrenta aun más peligro en las aguas de Florida. Se han encontrado seis ejemplares muertos en los últimos siete días, lo que representa un aumento preocupante en la mortalidad y sigue una misteriosa ola de muertes que ha desconcertado a los científicos durante meses.

Estos peces, que se asemejan a un tiburón con una boca en forma de sierra, son parte de un grupo de peces llamados elasmobranchios que incluyen rayas, tiburones y mantas, y pueden vivir por varias décadas en condiciones normales. Por lo general, se pierden alrededor de cinco adultos maduros cada año, la mayoría cuando son capturados accidentalmente en las pesquerías.

Pero este año, la Comisión de Pesca y Conservación de Vida Silvestre de Florida reportó que se han perdido 38, según el informe del miércoles, seis de los cuales ocurrieron en la semana previa.

Todavía no se sabe por qué los peces sierra están muriendo en números récord. Sin embargo, los buzos y pescadores han informado de que una variedad de otras especies se comportan de manera muy errática: nadando en círculos en lugar de nadar. Algunos peces sierra también han sido vistos nadando en círculos antes de morir.

Los informes de peces nadando en círculos comenzaron en otoño de 2024. El aumento de las mortalidades de peces sierra comenzó en enero de 2024. Es "posible que estos dos eventos puedan estar relacionados", dice la Comisión de Pesca y Conservación de Vida Silvestre de Florida.

Esfuerzos de Rehabilitación

Un pez sierra distressado fue avistado en la bahía Cudjoe en las Islas Keys de Florida el 5 de abril. Biólogos de la comisión y el Laboratorio Marino Mote transportaron el pez a un tanque temporal en las instalaciones del Mote donde se estabilizó su condición y el 6 de abril fue transportado por el Equipo de Conservación de los Acuarios Ripley al centro de cuarentena de Mote para la rehabilitación.

La comisión y la Trust de Bonefish y Tarpon han registrado más de 200 incidentes con más de 30 especies nadando de esta manera inusual. Esto ocurre principalmente en las Islas Keys, pero también se han reportado casos tan al norte como el área de Miami.

El pez sierra de dientes pequeños fue la primera especie marina en recibir protección federal a través de la Ley de Especies en Peligro de Extinción en 2003. El animal solía habitar en las aguas de todo el Golfo de México y a lo largo de la Costa Este desde Florida hasta Carolina del Norte, según la Administración Nacional Oceánica y Atmosférica, pero sus bajos números generalmente se encuentran solo frente a la costa de Florida.

Además de nadar en círculos, los informes recientes de buzos y pescadores en Florida indican que han visto a los peces sierra encallar.

Causas Desconocidas

Un equipo de expertos locales, estatales y federales en vida silvestre se está apresurando para descubrir qué está causando que los animales caigan en estos peligrosos giros.
