Following the provided content, I can see that the article is about becoming a professional football gambler. Here are the 1 main points discussed in the article:

1. Being a professional gambler requires more than just luck; it demands knowledge, time, effort, and mainly risk management skills. A professional gambler is capable of analyzing the nuances of the gambling universe and making informed and lucrative decisions in the long run.
2. The importance of risk management cannot be stressed enough. A professional gambler may experience losses at the beginning, like Josu Ramos, who had an initial loss of R R$ 2 thousand to 1 R R$ 5 thousand, but over time, he was able to reduce the losses and now receives R R$ 15 1 thousand to R R$ 20 thousand monthly.
3. A punter, a professional gambler, places their bets in reputable gambling houses. Their approach is generally to place bets before the start of the game, often days before, to take advantage of the best odds available for that event. However, becoming a successful punter also requires a solid foundation in risk management and data analysis.
4. To become a professional sports gambler, one must be willing to do what it takes to receive the event, including being attentive to the latest news and trends in sports. The article mentions that football can be a great booster for a professional gambler.
5. Becoming a professional football gambler requires investing time and effort in learning about the subject matter. It demands focusing on a specific area instead of playing every sport, modality, or market. Becoming a specialist in risk management, data analysis, and market trends is also essential. Lastly, one needs to be courageous and willing to do what is necessary to receive the event.

In sum, being a professional football gambler takes more than just chance. It demands a deep awareness of the gambling industry, remarkable risk management abilities, courage, and a willingness to study and concentrate on a particular area. The art of earning a living via sports gambling demands dedication, hard effort, and tolerance, but those who excel can receive significant returns.
