Esperanzas de un acuerdo multinacional para desbloquear R $$ 300$ mil millones de activos rusos congelados en Europa aumentan después de una reunión del G7

Las esperanzas de un acuerdo multinacional para desbloquear hasta $\mathrm{R} $ 300$ mil millones de activos rusos congelados en el sistema bancario europeo y utilizarlos en apoyo de Ucrania han aumentado después de que se supo que los ministros del G7 estaban confiados en superar los obstáculos técnicos y políticos en una reunión en el norte de Italia el sábado.
La ministra de Finanzas canadiense, Chrystia Freeland, dijo que era optimista sobre la posibilidad de que los líderes del G7 lleguen a un acuerdo, ya que cobró impulso un plan para utilizar los activos del banco central ruso congelados como garantía para un préstamo de $\mathrm{R} $ 50$ mil millones ( $£ 39$ mil millones).
Los ministros de Finanzas del Grupo de los Siete se reunieron en Stresa, Italia, para debatir un plan que presentarán a los líderes nacionales para su aprobación final en una cumbre programada para mediados de junio.
Alrededor de R $$ 300$ mil millones ( $£ 235$ mil millones) pertenecientes al banco central ruso están congelados en el oeste, en su mayoría en moneda extranjera, oro y bonos del gobierno.
Aproximadamente el $70 \%$ de esto se encuentra en el depósito central de valores belga Euroclear, que tiene el equivalente a $£ 162$ mil millones.

Se estima que EE. UU. tiene entre $\mathrm{R} $ 40$ mil millones y $\mathrm{R} $ 60$ mil millones en activos rusos, y el Reino Unido más cerca de $£ 25$ mil millones, aunque no se ha divulgado una cifra oficial. Ucrania ha estado presionando para obtener acceso a los fondos para ayudar a financiar la reconstrucción de su infraestructura dañada, liberando otros préstamos y subvenciones para comprar más armamento en la guerra con Rusia. Rusia recientemente abrió un nuevo frente al norte de Járkov y consolidó su posición en el sur, frustrando los avances ucranianos.
El secretario de Relaciones Exteriores británico, David Cameron, ha declarado anteriormente que el Reino Unido está a favor de prestar a Ucrania la suma total sobre la base de que Rusia será obligada a pagar reparaciones al final de la guerra.
Freeland dijo que el grupo está trabajando en un enfoque "colaborativo" donde todos los socios puedan encontrar un acuerdo.
Sus comentarios siguieron a las declaraciones del presidente del Banco Mundial, Ajay Banga, quien dijo que estaba "absolutamente" abierto a la idea de administrar un fondo de préstamo del G7 para Ucrania apoyado por los ingresos de los activos soberanos rusos congelados.
Hablando en la reunión de ministros de Finanzas, Banga dijo que el Banco Mundial tenía amplia experiencia en la administración de instalaciones similares de fondos donantes no militares, incluida una para Afganistán. Podría "replicar" ese trabajo para un préstamo de Ucrania, dijo. El ministro de Finanzas italiano, Giancarlo Giorgetti, expresó un tono similarmente positivo, diciendo que era "optimista" sobre este "tema clave" y que la esperanza era presentar a los líderes del G7 con un plan.
Sin embargo, el ministro de Finanzas alemán, Christian Lindner, un miembro de centroderecha del gobierno de coalición de Berlín, fue más cauteloso: "Hay muchos problemas sin resolver, muchas preguntas sin respuesta aquí. No espero que se tomen decisiones; el asunto es demasiado complejo para eso. Todavía hay muchas preguntas abiertas."
Los activistas dicen que todos los fondos deben ser confiscados para enviar un mensaje a Moscú de que su guerra se enfrentará con un apoyo abrumador a Ucrania.
Sin embargo, los gobiernos europeos, incluido el Reino Unido, se han mostrado reacios al plan, inicialmente argumentando que solo podrían justificar el uso de los intereses generados por los activos rusos, lo que equivale a alrededor de €2.5bn-€3bn (£2.1bn-£2.6bn) al año.
Bajo un acuerdo alcanzado la semana pasada por los estados miembros de la UE, el $90 \%$ de los ingresos procedentes se destinará a un fondo administrado por la UE para ser gastado en apoyo de las fuerzas militares de Ucrania, con el 10\% restante destinado a otras formas de apoyo. La UE espera que los activos generen alrededor de $€ 15 \mathrm{bn}-€ 20 \mathrm{bn}$ en beneficios para 2027 . Se espera que Ucrania reciba la primera remesa en julio, según diplomáticos de la UE.
Un plan estadounidense para aprovechar todos los fondos para apoyar un préstamo ha ganado terreno, aunque muchos de los problemas técnicos, incluida la forma en que los países patrocinadores del préstamo asignarían fondos para proyectos, aún no se han resuelto antes de la reunión de ministros de Finanzas.
Un grupo de abogados internacionales ha dado una opinión de que la confiscación podría llevarse a cabo dentro de los marcos legales existentes, argumentando que el ataque de Rusia fue una violación del derecho internacional y justificó las reparaciones por al menos el costo del daño infligido a Ucrania, que según las estimaciones del Banco Mundial asciende a R$480 mil millones ( $£ 377$ mil millones).
La secretaria del Tesoro de EE. UU., Janet Yellen, ha sugerido que un préstamo de R$50 mil millones es posible utilizando los fondos rusos como garantía, además del plan de la UE, dando a Ucrania un generoso salvavidas que surtiría efecto independientemente del resultado de las elecciones presidenciales de EE. UU. más tarde este año.
"Nuestra esperanza sería demostrar que esos activos brindan un flujo viable de apoyo en los años venideros", dijo. "Este es un flujo garantizado de financiamiento y es importante que Rusia se dé cuenta de que no seremos disuadidos de apoyar a Ucrania por falta de recursos."

Ucrania tiene un equipo de funcionarios en la reunión que actúan como asesores. También está esperando obtener financiamiento del Fondo Monetario Internacional (FMI), que enviará una misión a Polonia el lunes para una semana de conversaciones con funcionarios financieros ucranianos.
Kiev debe convencer al FMI de que se han cumplido todas las condiciones de sus préstamos anteriores. Se espera que reciba otros $R $ 2.2$ mil millones antes de una revisión adicional en el otoño.
