Botafogo's owner, John Textor, accused São Paulo players of match-fixing; here's what he said John Textor, the owner of Botafogo's controlling company, made accusations of match-fixing against São Paulo players, though he did not present any evidence to back up his claims. In a lengthy post on his website, Textor also poked fun at Leila Pereira, president of Palmeiras, and Ednaldo Rodrigues, president of the CBF.

Textor claimed that Palmeiras benefited from manipulated matches against São Paulo and Fortaleza in the Brazilian league, without providing any proof. He also took the opportunity to mock Leila Pereira and Ednaldo Rodrigues, implying that they turn a blind eye to match-fixing.

In his statement, Textor defended himself and Botafogo, stating that he has 100% proof that match-fixing impacted the results of the Brazilian league in the last two years. He also stated that he submitted evidence regarding two matches to the public ministry, which he claims were manipulated.

Textor asserts that he has evidence that the Palmeiras x Fortaleza match in November 2024 and the Palmeiras x São Paulo match in October 2024 were manipulated, and that Palmeiras was the main beneficiary of this manipulation in both seasons. However, he did not present any evidence that the Palmeiras team or its management were involved in the match-fixing.

The Botafogo's owner also claimed that the CBF and other authorities did not take appropriate action when he brought the matter to their attention, and that this contributed to the corruption problem in the Brazilian league.

In conclusion, Textor alleged that the Palmeiras team is the main beneficiary of match-fixing in the Brazilian league, and that the CBF is not doing enough to investigate and address the issue. He presented evidence regarding two specific matches, but he did not provide any proof to support his accusations against Palmeiras or its management.

The situation is still developing, and it remains to be seen if any legal action will be taken against Textor or Palmeiras. For now, fans of Brazilian football can only wait and see how the situation unfolds.
