Oops, it looks like the provided text is not in English! Sorry about that. Here's a summary of the news article in English:

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention (CDC) in the United States has confirmed a case of human infection with the H5N1 bird flu virus in Texas. The patient had direct contact with infected cows on a farm that produces milk. This is the second case of human infection with the H5N1 virus in the United States in recent weeks, after several states detected infected cows on farms.

According to the CDC, the patient had inflammation in the eyes and is currently undergoing treatment. The CDC stated that this infection does not change the assessment of the risk of the H5N1 flu virus to human health in the general public, which is considered low. However, the agency warned that people exposed to birds or animals infected with the virus or in contaminated environments have a higher risk of infection.

The CDC also emphasized that the infected patient had direct contact with infected cows, which highlights the importance of proper hygiene practices, particularly in agricultural settings. The agency encourages people to take precautions, such as wearing gloves and protective clothing when interacting with animals, to prevent the spread of the virus.

In summary, a case of human infection with the H5N1 bird flu virus has been confirmed in Texas, highlighting the importance of proper hygiene practices to prevent the spread of the virus.
