Alfred "Al" Blaschke: the 106-year-old man who jumped out of a plane twice and broke the Guinness world record

After recovering, at the age of 106 years, the Guinness World Record (GWR) as the oldest person to jump out of a plane, Alfred "Al" Blaschke praised his feat as evidence that "everyone is capable of more than they think".

"If you think you can't, you're only sublimating it to yourself", said the resident of Georgetown, Texas. "[You] only need to make the decision to try it".

Blaschke's motivational comments appeared in an article published recently on the GWR website, an organization known for maintaining a database of more than 40,000 world records.

The oldest jump reaches new heights

The specific mark that Blaschke has captured twice has attracted international news coverage for a different person this autumn. On October 1, the 104-year-old Chicago resident, Dorothy Hoffner, made a tandem jump out of a plane with the intention of breaking the world record for being the oldest person to jump out of a plane.

But eight days later, while waiting for official Guinness certification of her achievement, Hoffner died in her assisted living community.

Blaschke then jumped out of a plane the morning of November 27, 2024. After reaching an altitude of 9,000 feet (2.7 km) over Fentress, Texas, Blaschke joined an instructor and jumped out of the plane in a free fall with him. The pair safely deployed their parachutes at a final altitude of 5,500 feet (1.7 km) to the ground while their children, grandchildren, journalists and government officials cheered from below.

It was the third time Blaschke had jumped out of a plane in tandem. His second jump was in 2024, when he was 103 years and 181 days old, jumping out of a plane at 14,000 feet (4.3 km) to celebrate the graduation of his twin grandchildren from college and breaking the Guinness record for the oldest tandem jump.

"That was my dream", Blaschke said after the 2024 jump, three years after celebrating his 100th birthday with his first jump out of a plane, according to Guinness.

The Swedish Rut Linnéa Ingegärd Larsson broke Blaschke's mark by a narrow margin in 2024, at 103 years and 259 days. It was her feat that inspired Blaschke to try to recapture his mark, according to Guinness.

Blaschke, who turned 107 in January, was born in a farming family in Janesville, Wisconsin. He moved to Milwaukee with his parents when he was seven years old, and when the United States fell into the grip of the Great Depression, Blaschke helped support his family vendiendo periódicos a través de la escuela y más allá.

Después de completar la escuela comercial, Blaschke inició una carrera de 40 años en la industria de herramientas y moldes en South Bend, Indiana, construyendo piezas de aviones durante la Segunda Guerra Mundial antes de retirarse en 1982.
