The pastor of Dallas, who assumed leadership of the organization for the rights of Rev. Jesse Jackson, resigned on Wednesday 2 months after three months in office.

The reverend Frederick Haynes III told the Associated Press that he sent a letter with 2 365bet resignations as head of the Rainbow PUSH Coalition, based in Chicago. "After a period of prayer and consultation, I felt that it was best to leave the position as president of the Rainbow PUSH", he said by phone from Texas. "I am always honored by Rev. Jesse Jackson's consideration of me as a worthy successor to the organization he founded."

Haynes, 63 years old, said he felt it was "necessary" to step down from 365bet in the face of "ongoing challenges", but he refused to elaborate further.

Neither Jackson nor other representatives of the organization immediately commented.

In July, he announced that he would leave the organization founded 50 years ago and presented Haynes as his successor.

Haynes, pastor of the Baptist Church of Friendship in Dallas, was formally installed as president and CEO in a ceremony in February 2 in that city. He planned to lead the Rainbow PUSH, which advocates for social justice in Texas, to promote a more active political movement in the country.

Haynes said that, although the formal acquisition took place in February 2024, he had been active in the Rainbow PUSH (Push) for some time during the summer and hoped to collaborate with the organization in the future.

Haynes has had health problems in recent years and has been diagnosed with Parkinson's disease.
