Bayer Leverkusen players celebrate goal by simulating a joint (Updated 05/04/2024)

In a surprising move, two Bayer Leverkusen players, Jeremie Frimpong and Amine Adli, celebrated a goal during their recent match against Fortuna Dusseldorf by simulating a joint, causing a stir in the soccer world. The duo's unusual celebration has gone viral on social media, with many speculating about its meaning.

The players' joint celebration comes shortly after Germany legalized the recreational use of marijuana for adults over 18. Some have interpreted the celebration as a reference to the recent legalization, but neither player has confirmed this.

The Leverkusen team, which is coached by Xabi Alonso, has made it to the final of the German Cup and the quarterfinals of the Europa League. Their unique celebration has even earned them a new nickname, "Leverkonha," a play on the name of the team and the German word for marijuana.

Many have praised the duo's creativity and sense of humor, but others have criticized their actions, suggesting that they should focus on playing soccer rather than indulging in off-field antics.

Regardless of the players' intentions, their celebration has captured the attention of fans and sparked a national conversation about marijuana legalization. Some have called for more professionalism from athletes, while others have embraced the players' playful and lighthearted spirit.

The issue has also sparked a debate about the role of drugs in sports, with some arguing that professional athletes should avoid any association with drugs, while others believe that they should be free to make their own choices off the field.

In any case, the Leverkusen duo's celebration has added some excitement to the Bayer Leverkusen's successful run in the German Cup and Europa League. Fans eagerly await their next match, where they will face off against rivals Bayern Munich in the German Cup final.
