Historically, awards for the best player in the world have almost always gone to forwards and, at most, offensive midfielders. However, this tradition may come to an end this season. With each round of the English Championship and the Champions League, it becomes less surprising that the next Ballon d'Or or The Best trophy could go to a defensive midfielder.

At 27 years old and in his fifth season with Manchester City, Spanish player Rodri has long since left behind being treated as a mere sidekick. Today, he is directly responsible for the success of the team that has won the last three editions of the Premier League, is the current European champion, and will face Real Madrid tomorrow in the Champions League quarterfinals.

Although he does not have the same offensive production as his teammates Erling Haaland and Phil Foden, Kylian Mbappé (Paris Saint-Germain), Jude Bellingham or Vinícius Júnior (Real Madrid), other candidates for the award, Rodri's function is not to score goals, at least not as his main duty. His job is to control the ball, and he has done so masterfully. With an average of 105.8 passes per game in the Premier League and 107 in the Champions League, and a pass completion rate of over 90%, Rodri is the player who has distributed the most passes in both competitions.

According to the "Sofascore" platform, which uses artificial intelligence to turn statistics into notes that measure the performance of each player, Rodri is the standout player in the English league (8.05) and the third-best in the Champions League (7.92).

In more than 30 years of history, the FIFA awards (such as The Best) have only crowned two players with more defensive characteristics: German player Lothar Matthäus (1990), who played as a libero and midfielder throughout his career, and Italian defender Fabio Cannavaro (2006).

The Ballon d'Or, which has been awarded since 1956, has a slightly greater diversity of winners, having even been awarded to a goalkeeper, Soviet player Lev Yashin (1963). However, its most recent winner who primarily played in defense is the same as the FIFA awards, Cannavaro. In other words, for the past 18 years, all the world's best players have been offensive options for their club teams and national teams.

After securing their first Champions League title last season, City now has an even more ambitious goal: to be the first club in over 40 years to win back-to-back titles in the world's top interclub tournament.

The last team to "lose its virginity" in one year and become champion again the following season was the English Nottingham Forest, which won the trophy for the first time in 1978 and repeated the feat in 1979.

Since then, only Milan (1989 and 1990) and Real Madrid (2024, 2024, and 2024) have been able to win the Champions League in consecutive seasons. However, both of them had previous victories before starting these sequences.
