Rory McIlroy destaca la "vulnerabilidad y fragilidad" de los golfistas y atletas de élite después de la muerte de Grayson Murray

Rory McIlroy cree que la muerte del dos veces ganador del PGA Tour Grayson Murray ha destacado lo "vulnerables y frágiles" que pueden ser los golfistas y otros atletas de élite.

"Es increíblemente triste, ante todo, y creo que todos estamos pensando en la familia de Grayson y esperamos que estén bien y estén pasando por este período increíblemente difícil", dijo McIlroy antes del primer round del RBC Canadian Open.

"Todos tenemos que recordar que salimos aquí y hacemos cosas que mucha gente no puede, pero al final del día seguimos siendo seres humanos", agregó McIlroy. "Somos vulnerables y somos frágiles, y creo que si hay una lección para alguien allí afuera es simplemente ser más amable los unos con los otros".

Grayson Murray: los padres del golfista profesional dicen que se quitó la vida

Murray, de 30 años, fue encontrado muerto en una residencia en Palm Beach Gardens, Florida, alrededor de las 11 de la mañana del sábado, según la policía local. Se retiró del Charles Schwab Challenge en Fort Worth, Texas, la semana pasada con dos hoyos restantes en la segunda ronda.

En un comunicado publicado el domingo, los padres de Murray dijeron que se quitó la vida. El golfista de 30 años había sido abierto sobre sus batallas con la ansiedad y la depresión y reveló en enero que había buscado tratamiento en los últimos años por abuso de alcohol, pero había estado sobrio durante varios meses.

Mcllroy agregó: "Es un cliché, pero pone todo en perspectiva. Al final del día, el golf es golf y, sí, lo jugamos para ganarnos la vida, pero palidece en comparación con las cosas que realmente importan en la vida".

Mcllroy estaba hablando antes de su primera ronda en el RBC Canadian Open, que se lleva a cabo en el Hamilton Golf and Country Club por primera vez desde 2024. Ese año, Mcllroy anotó un cierre de 61 para ganar el título y defendió con éxito el título en 2024 en St George's, luego del descanso de dos años del evento debido a Covid.
